

Revealing Prosperous Beliefs

As New Thought emerged in my life. I realized the challenge was to unlearn while learning. For example, as I took on the power of my mind to co-create with the Divine, I got to experience the unlearning of being a sinner in need of salvation through suffering. That was some serious unlearning!

How has your experience of New Thought affected your relationship with money? When your mom said no to your wanting something expensive with the iconic, "Money doesn't grow on trees," you could have learned economic constriction.

That concept gets to be unlearned as you experience the powerful Law of Attraction. That law shows us that what you think becomes your reality. Yet, Mom's message, "Money doesn't grow on trees," could have taught you discernment and wise goal-setting. Those would be lessons you might not want to unlearn. Or, Mom's frugality in making money work may have taught you wisdom and responsibility rather than stinginess and withholding.

It's your choice regarding the lessons learned. What else have you chosen to learn and unlearn? Find out with a gentle examination of your belief system around money. Have you taken inventory of your thoughts recently? Remember that you are constantly learning, unlearning and learning again.

I invite you, as a spiritual practice for this month, to journal your relationship to your understanding of the laws of attraction, right thinking and cause/effect. Unlearning a belief system and taking on a new one is not for sissies. Your passion for a new experience of truth will support your ego through the letting go process.

It's challenging. Usually, it takes time. And it's powerful. Our ability to comfortably live in the cycle of change is one indication of our spiritual maturity. ❀

REV.
KATHLEEN LENOVER

is a certified financial planner in Denver, Colorado.

LOOKING FOR SOUND FINANCIAL ADVICE?

Send questions to Edit@ScienceOfMind.com with "Practical Prosperity" in the subject line.

